

s22

Michael West Media article on deployment of SLCM-N from SRF-W

On 27 September, Michael West Media reported, in an article by Rex Patrick and Philip Dorling, on the acceleration of the sea-launched cruise missiles (SLCM-N) under the Trump Administration and its implications for Australia's obligations under the Treaty of Rarotonga. The article argued Submarine Rotational Force-West and the associated investment at HMAS Stirling would constitute 'stationing' and 'basing'. The deployment of SLCM-N on US Virginia-class submarines 'stationed' in Australia under AUKUS could breach Australia's obligations under the Treaty of Rarotonga, and the Government's public pledges of its commitment to the Treaty of Rarotonga appeared 'duplicitous'.

s22

s22

Michael West Media article on deployment of SLCM-N from SRF-W

On 27 September, Michael West Media reported, in an article by Rex Patrick and Philip Dorling, on the acceleration of the sea-launched cruise missiles (SLCM-N) under the Trump Administration and its implications for Australia's obligations under the Treaty of Rarotonga. The article argued Submarine Rotational Force-West and the associated investment at HMAS Stirling would constitute 'stationing' and 'basing'. The deployment of SLCM-N on US Virginia-class submarines 'stationed' in Australia under AUKUS could breach Australia's obligations under the Treaty of Rarotonga, and the Government's public pledges of its commitment to the Treaty of Rarotonga appeared 'duplicitous'.

s22

s22

Michael West Media article on deployment of SLCM-N from SRF-W (27 September)

On 27 September, Michael West Media reported, in an article by Rex Patrick and Philip Dorling, on the acceleration of the sea-launched cruise missiles (SLCM-N) under the Trump Administration and its implications for Australia's obligations under the Treaty of Rarotonga. The article argued Submarine Rotational Force-West and the associated investment at HMAS Stirling would constitute 'stationing' and 'basing'. The deployment of SLCM-N on US Virginia-class submarines 'stationed' in Australia under AUKUS could breach Australia's obligations under the Treaty of Rarotonga, and the Government's public pledges of its commitment to the Treaty of Rarotonga appeared 'duplicitous'.

s22

